

♥ Someone like me ♥

1. Tick the column that matches your character or personality for each statement below.

Statements	Exactly like me	Quite like me	A bit like me	Not really like me	Not at all like me
Statement: I tend to blurt out embarrassing things.
Statement: I would say that I'm a shy person.
Statement: I love spending time by myself.
Statement: My life is following a completely predictable course.
Statement: I am actually quite content with the person that I have turned out to be.
Statement: I make new friends easily.
Statement: I like reading and writing poetry.
Statement: Computer games tend to take over my life.
Statement: After I finish school, I'd like to have an adventurous life.
Statement: My musical taste is eclectic (broad and varied).
Statement: I would rather send a text than an email.
Statement: I love going on Facebook and using other social networking sites.
Statement: I get along pretty well with my parents.
Statement: My brother(s) and sister(s) really get on my nerves sometimes.
Statement: I'm an ambitious person.

2. Now write two extra statements of your own like the ones in the left-hand column above. Try your statements out on your neighbour, partner, friend, teacher or the whole class.

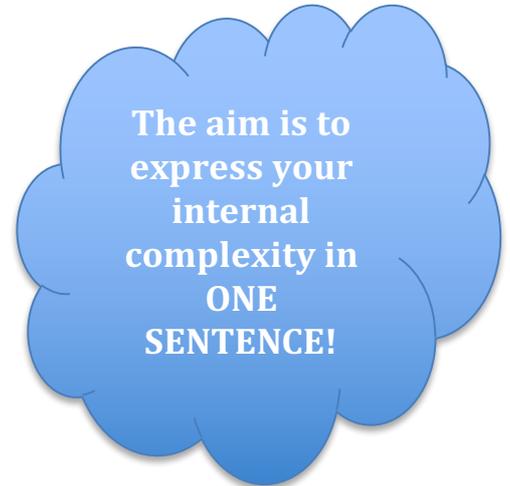

3. Now use the statements above in the left-hand column to write four sentences below that contain two (opposing) ideas. I call these sentences double-barrelled, multi-tasking sentences. Grammatically speaking, they are sentences with two clauses.

In the sentence below, one clause is the main clause while the other is a subordinate clause. Can you figure out which is which?

“Although I tend to be a shy person, I can also be quite extroverted when I am with familiar people.”

Here are some phrases that trigger such clauses:

- Although I..., I...
- Whenever my parents..., I...
- When my friends..., I...
- Since I was..., I have always...
- Ever since..., ...
- Even though..., ...
- Even if..., ...
- Whereas my friends say that..., I think that I ...
- Before I..., I always...
